Dementia and Communication

How does dementia affect communication?

Alzheimer's and other dementias cause damage to brain cells.

These changes in the brain affect memory, thinking, behavior and communication skills.

Communication changes are caused by the disease, not the person.

Communication changes are often the earliest sign of dementia.

Changes vary from person to person, but common ones include:

- Difficulty finding the right words.
- Repeating familiar words, phrases and stories.
- Describing an item when they can't think of the word for it.
- Forgetting what they were talking about in the middle of a sentence.
- Difficulty organizing words in a way that makes sense.
- Going back to speaking in their native language.
- Speaking less often.
- Using hand gestures more than speaking.

Using a Person-Centered Approach to Communication

Putting It Into Practice - Communication

Alonzo's wife, Alicia, is living with Alzheimer's disease and no longer able to get out of bed on her own. Prior to her diagnosis, she worked at an elementary school as a librarian. Alicia is no longer able to speak and Alonzo is having a hard time communicating with her. This is making Alonzo feel less connected to Alicia.

Putting It Into Practice - Communication

What could Alonzo do to try to communicate with Alicia and stay connected to her?

Select the two best tips for success:

- ☐ 1. Hold Alicia's hand as he tells her what he did that day.
- ☐ 2. Put the radio on in Alicia's room.
- ☐ 3. Read one of Alicia's favorite books to her.
- ☐ 4. There is nothing Alonzo can do because Alicia can no longer speak.
